Writing Program Instructors Receive Award

Instructors Deborah Schnitzer and Catherine Taylor of The University of Winnipeg's Writing Program recently won the Red River Valley Educator Award for innovation in teaching.

The award is given annually to an outstanding educator(s) in the Red River Valley area by the Red River Valley Heritage Society through Moorhead State University.

While pleased with the award, both women downplayed their own success and praised the Writing Program itself and the other instructors and tutors.

"Everyone at the centre is committed to a vision of this university as 'downtown' in spirit as well as in location," says Schnitzer, former Writing Centre Director.

"We are taking the idea of accessibility to heart without compromising the academic standards of the University," adds Taylor, Director of the Writing Program's Computer Writing Centre.

Both instructors feel the key to the Writing Program is that it has a sense of community. Students with experience in the program share their resources with others who are just entering.

Both women also spoke of the success of the Rising Sun project. Rising Sun High School is an alternate school which serves students who have problems fitting into other educational systems. These students attended the Writing Centre on a regular basis and worked on their writing skills with tutors.

Schnitzer believes that students such as those from Rising Sun bring special 'gifts' to the program from their cultural experience or their multi-lingual background. In return, they

Visiting Professorship in Canadian Studies Announced

The University of Winnipeg's Canadian Studies program has received a $25,000 grant from the Canadian Studies Directorate of the Department of the Secretary of State. The grant is part of a federal government program that matches private-sector support to universities.

According to Alden Turner, Co-ordinator of Canadian Studies at The University of Winnipeg, the grant enables the University to appoint a visiting professor in Native Studies for three years.

The Visiting Professorship in Canadian Studies is intended to reflect the meaningful participation of aboriginal peoples in contemporary Canadian society. The University will make a faculty appointment to a prominent individual with inter-disciplinary expertise on issues affecting aboriginal communities. An announcement of the person elected is expected to be made in December. According to Turner, both students and faculty will benefit from this approach

Capital Offences: Canadian Cartoonists Look at Parliament Hill

The University of Winnipeg's Gallery 1C03 presents its second exhibition of the 1991-92 academic year, "Capital Offences: Canadian Cartoonists Look at Parliament Hill." The show runs until Dec. 3.

Parliament Hill provides the backdrop for this collection of over 50 drawings lampooning political figures from Sir John A. Macdonald to Brian Mulroney.

Political cartoons have an enduring popularity. A single visual image can knock politicians from the pedestals on which they sometimes place themselves.

As former Newfoundland premier Joey Smallwood said, "Cartoons, friendly or unfriendly, are so good that I'd hate to see them wasted on my opponents."

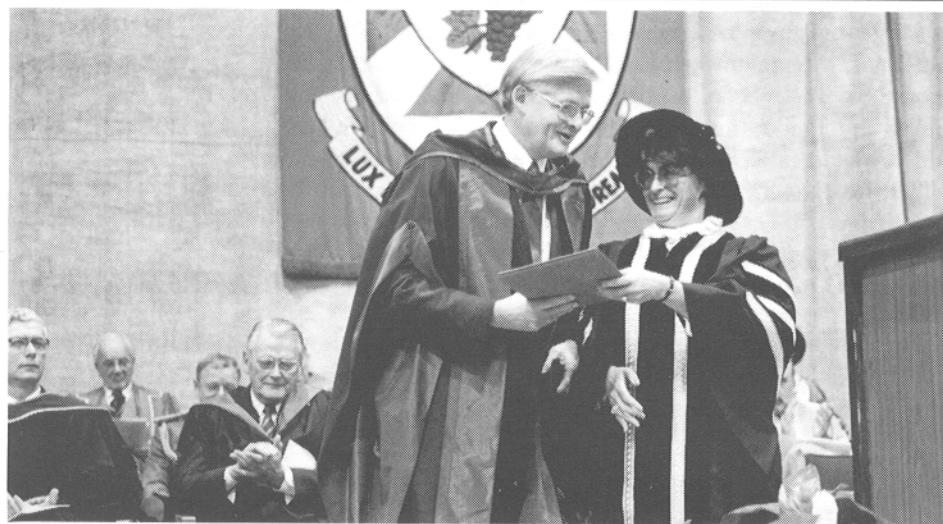

Ironically, visitors will also find that many topics in today's news were once grist for the cartooning mill over a century ago.

The exhibition draws from the private collections of Canadian cartoonists and the National Archives of Canada. The National Archives has a collection of over 20,000 political cartoons.

"Capital Offences" is on display in Gallery 1C03, Mon. - Fri., 10a.m.-3p.m., Sat., 1-4p.m.

This exhibition is presented by the National Archives of Canada and the Office of the Speaker of the House of Commons.

History Professor Robert Young receives the Rogers Award for Excellence in Research and Scholarship from President Marsha Hanen at Fall Convocation.

Black Holes

Werner Israel, Professor of Theoretical Physics at the University of Alberta, will give a special lecture on "Black Holes" on Tues., Nov. 19 at The University of Winnipeg.

Israel specializes in general relativity and gravitation. He is a member of the Royal Society of Canada and a Fellow of both the Royal Society of London and the Canadian Institute for Advanced Research. He has won the Killam Memorial Prize, the University of Alberta Research Prize and the Alberta Achievement Award for Excellence. Israel has also received an honorary degree from Queen's University.

-Uma Parameswaran, Professor of English, is Chair of Women-Focused Research, a project that aims to promote faculty research in the area, and to organize a conference in the fall of 1992. The project is funded by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada under its Aid to Small Universities grant.

-David Topper, Professor of History, delivered an invited keynote lecture at the conference on Scientific Illustration: Historical and Philosophical Problems, Oct. 19, at the University of Toronto. His paper was titled "Towards an Epistemology of Scientific Illustration."

-Doug Reimer, head coach of the Women's Volleyball Team, recently visited Yellowknife as a guest of the Northwest Territories Volleyball Association. Reimer conducted clinics for the N.W.T. Arctic Games and Canada Games Team as well as a players' clinic for the recreational league. During the course of the weekend Reimer also conducted sessions for local coaches.

-Rudolph Dyck, a member of The University of Winnipeg Wesmen Volleyball Team, is a 1991-92 recipient of a $2,000 Canadian Olympic Association's Petro-Canada Olympic Torch Scholarship. The scholarships have been awarded to 83 student-athletes, and nine coaching students, representing 42 different Olympic and Pan Am sports, from across the country. There were six Manitoba winners.

to contemporary Canadian issues and problems. "The Visiting Professorship in Canadian Studies is consistent with The University of Winnipeg's efforts to meet the changing educational requirements of its community," he says.

New Coordinator Heads Growing Program

Douglas M. Skoog, Associate Professor of Sociology, is the new coordinator for the University's Justice and Law Enforcement Program.

Skoog's commitment to restructure and reinvigorate the program comes when interest in the field is at an all-time high. As an interdisciplinary major, the program has seen dramatic growth in recent years. This year, 255 students are enrolled, making Justice and Law Enforcement the University's third largest major - after Sociology and Psychology.

Skoog, who has taught at The University of Winnipeg for 20 years, describes his new position as "akin to that of a department chair, but different." He says that in the 10-12 years that Justice and Law Enforcement has been offered, the program's focus has never been so clear. Skoog emphasizes, "The program will be far more student oriented than it has been in past years."

Plans to increase student input include the creation of an advisory group which Skoog calls his "steering committee." Besides Skoog, and one other department representative from Sociology, each department that contributes courses to the major (e.g. Anthropology, History, Philosophy) will name one person as a representative to the committee. Two or three students from the program will also be asked to participate. The advisory group will assist in the formulation and implementation of new ideas and directions for the major.

In cooperation with John Hofley, Associate Dean (Curriculum), Skoog hopes to create a work study component - placing 10 students each year in agencies looking for volunteer workers. Possibilities include placements with Probation Services, the St. Norbert Foundation, Stony Mountain Penitentiary and Headingly Correctional Institute.

Skoog would also like to establish a mandatory research methods course for students of Justice and Law Enforcement. He also plans to bring in special speakers.

Skoog hopes his three-year term as coordinator will help dispel the myth that Justice and Law Enforcement is "an easy A" program. With talk of a research methods course and a work study program, Skoog warns, only serious students need apply.

In Memoriam

Frances Stewart

The University community is saddened to learn of the death of Frances Stewart, a former employee of The University of Winnipeg. She passed away on September 23, 1991. Frances worked in the Library for 19 years. She started as a Library Assistant in 1959 and was a Cataloguer when she left in 1978.

leave with the gift of confidence that helps them cope in a university environment. "We learn as much from them as they learn from us," Schnitzer adds.

Taylor says the Writing Centre program was short-listed last year for the Lieutenant Governor's Literacy Award. This year, in the Smith Commission of Inquiry on Canadian University Education, The University of Winnipeg's Writing Program was singled out as a model program worthy of national attention.

United Way Contributions Go Over the Top

As of Fri., Nov. 1, University employees and retirees had contributed a total of $45,182.68 to the 1991 United Way Campaign while special events on campus during the month of October raised an additional $2,126.88 bringing this year's total to $47,309.56. This represents 103.6 per cent of our total goal of $45,645 which was set at five per cent higher than last year's total contributions. Even though the dollar value of our contributions has increased significantly, the rate of participation at this stage of the campaign has remained relatively unchanged at 49 per cent (last year, the final rate was 53 per cent).

The formal portion of the University's United Way Campaign is over, but employees may still opt to make contributions. If you have not yet completed your pledge card, please take a few minutes to do so now and return it to your canvasser or directly to the Employee Relations Office. If you have misplaced your pledge card, a new one may be obtained by calling the Employee Relations Office at 786-9400.

The United Way provides support at varying levels to a total of 62 agencies in Winnipeg. Family violence, poverty, unemployment, and homelessness are only a few of the very real needs which are creating unprecedented demands for programs and services. Every donation, large or small, makes a tremendous difference to thousands of proud Winnipeggers who count on us to help them help themselves.

Operations Auditor Stresses Positive Role of Job

News that the Operations Auditor will be looking at how your department functions often elicits a response akin to learning that Revenue Canada would like to have a word with you about your tax return.

The anxiety arises, says University Operations Auditor Carol Halko, out of a misconception that operations auditors are "out to get you in trouble."

Halko works hard at breaking down that myth. "Auditors are there to help people to do their jobs better," she says. "An operations auditor takes an objective look at how efficiently an organization uses its resources."

"In the past," says Halko, "an organization had an auditor for financial reasons." That is changing, however, with comprehensive auditing. "Now the focus is no longer just on financial issues, but on management and people issues as well," she explains.

"It's not just dealing with numbers, it's a people job," says Halko, addressing the myth that accountants are only "bean counters." The challenge, she believes, comes from using your skills to make the auditing experience a positive one for people, even though they don't always like the outcome. One reason for this, explains Halko, is that the outcome often involves change.

*Operations Auditor

Halko sees resistance to change as a negative force. She realizes that change is stressful for people in the beginning, but states: "In the long run, new systems can save time, money and energy, and make working life more comfortable."

Halko points out that as an operations auditor she also has the opportunity to do project work such as her 14-month secondment to the Division of Continuing Education. It is one example of how, as an operations auditor, she is able to see how different departments function. "But more than that," she adds, "it gives me the chance to get to know the majority of people in the University beyond what they do for a living. This is a great place to make friends."

"I love my job," says Halko emphatically. "I enjoy the energy of the University and the diversity of administration, academics and students."

Disabled Obstacle Race Opens Participants' Eyes

"One way to know how difficult it is to get around campus in a wheelchair is to do it," says Larry Didow, Dean of Students. Didow was the winner in the Disabled Obstacle Race, one of the special events in the University's annual United Way Campaign. Doug Skoog, Associate Professor of Sociology, and Zonny Woods, President of The University of Winnipeg Students' Association, were the other two contestants.

"Although our university is probably one of the most accessible for the disabled, they still face limitations," says Carlene Besner, Coordinator, Special Needs Students. "They have to be aware of alternate routes to places like the Admissions Office, and what time the elevator shuts off in Graham Hall. Some wheelchairs are too wide for the chair lift in Wesley Hall," she adds.

Skoog, who placed second in the race, states: "Apart from the fact we felt good about raising money for the United Way, it certainly opened my eyes to the things we all take for granted, such as walking into the Admissions Office."

Didow noticed how much easier it was to move along a smooth floor, rather than the carpeted areas which offered more resistance. He also found it tricky to open a door while trying to manipulate the wheelchair at the same time. "However," he adds, "I always found students willing to assist." By way of advice, Didow has this to offer: "If you see a disabled person facing a closed door or a steep ramp, don't be afraid to offer your help. It'll be appreciated."

Doug Skoog and Zonny Woods race towards the finish line at the Disabled Obstacle Race, a special event for the University's United Way Campaign.

Alice Hamilton

University faculty and staff mourn the passing of Alice Hamilton, Professor Emeritus of English at The University of Winnipeg. Hamilton died in Winnipeg, November 8, 1991.

Hamilton was a distinguished graduate of Dalhousie University and of the University of London. She began her teaching career in Winnipeg in 1959 in the English Department of United College, and taught for 20 years. Hamilton retired from The University of Winnipeg in 1979, when she was honoured with the title Professor Emeritus of English. In the same year she was the recipient of the Clifford J. Robson Award for Excellence in Teaching.

"She was not just a teacher, she inspired people. Her work reflected her joy in finding things out," said her long-time friend and colleague Robert Gold, Associate Professor of Classics. "Alice was a remarkable person and a first-rate scholar."

She is survived by her husband Kenneth Hamilton, Professor Emeritus of Religious Studies at The University of Winnipeg, her three children and her grandchildren.

New Library Service Available

Need the latest article in a journal only carried in the Dafoe Library at the University of Manitoba? Now you can have it in a day or two without the driving, parking, photocopying and time involved in hunting down sources.

The University of Winnipeg Library is participating in "Library Express," a pilot project of several Winnipeg libraries until Feb. 14, 1992.

According to Allison Dixon, Interlending and Document Supply Services Coordinator at The University of Winnipeg Library, the purpose of the project is to provide library clients with quick and easy access to material available in other locations in the city. Books or journal articles can now be couriered or faxed from other libraries to our library within 24

- 48 hours.

Says Dixon: "The libraries hope if the project proves viable it will be continued and extended to member libraries throughout the province."

The following libraries are participating in the project:

- Legislative Library
- Red River Community College Library
- University of Manitoba Libraries-Fort Garry Campus
- University of Manitoba Libraries-Downtown Campus (Medical)
- The University of Winnipeg Library
- Winnipeg Public Library (Centennial)
