

Good News Starts Off the New Year

The University of Winnipeg received some good news to start off the New Year: The 1991 Annual Appeal has surpassed its $100,000 goal.

As of Dec. 20, the University's alumni, friends, board of regents members, faculty and staff donated $104,218 to the 1991 Annual Appeal. Annual Appeal donations are in addition to money raised through the Capital Campaign, the Wesmen Booster Club, bequests, grants, gifts-in-kind, Alumni Association special projects and externally-funded scholarships and bursaries.

According to Brian Daly, Director of Advancement and Alumni, "This year's appeal raised more money than any other annual appeal in the history of the University." The class of 1941 was the strongest supporter with 62.3 per cent of the class making a gift this year. Other extraordinary alumni years include the class of 1919 at 50 per cent participation, 1931 at 47.4 per cent, 1932 at 33.3 per cent and the class of 1939 at 31.7 per cent. Daly noted that all classes supported the Annual

Did Gateway Catch Your Attention?

With 252,000 copies delivered throughout Winnipeg, and one sent to every faculty and staff member, it was probably difficult to miss the Winter '92 edition of "Gateway." Hopefully, it was equally difficult to miss the exciting developments in Continuing Education. Indeed, we would be surprised if you didn't find something of personal interest in "Gateway," and we would like to take this opportunity to remind you that employees of The University of Winnipeg can pursue that personal interest at a 50 per cent discount.

As in the past, the staff discount applies to vacant seats that are purchased during the three-day period before the start of the course. This rule applies to virtually all our programming (the only courses excluded are a

Research Profile

Biologists' Invention Could Revitalize Rural Communities

The popular walleye (pickerel) is under siege in Manitoba's lakes. But University of Winnipeg biologists have found a way to increase the dwindling fish supply and, at the same time, perhaps revitalize some rural communities.

Professor Eric Moodie has developed a system to raise walleye in captivity and stock lakes. "It may be a way for us to put something back into rural communities and help them to maintain their economies," he said.

Moodie noted that pickerel is the most important freshwater fish to the province and that Manitoba has one of the few remaining commercial walleye industries in North America. "Our system could help maintain this industry and it could also be used to establish an alternative source of income for people who have lost their traditional livelihoods," he said.

In the past, scientists have found it impossible to raise walleye in captivity because of the fishes' finicky eating habits. But Moodie and his colleagues, Nancy Loadman and Gavin Baird of The University of Winnipeg and Jack Mathias of the Freshwater Institute, have invented a fish feeder which releases food in just the right amount and at the appropriate intervals.

Using the feeder, the research team can raise walleye in hatcheries and release them into lakes, where, according to Moodie, they have a very good chance of survival. "There would be more walleye for everyone - for the commercial fishermen, the tourists, aboriginal people," he said. "Another possibility is to grow and sell the fish to other provinces or to the United States - for stocking their lakes or directly to their supermarkets."

In October, more than 7,000 walleye produced by Moodie and his team were released into Lake Mantagao, located in the Interlake region, north of Fisher Branch. These fish were hatched at the Rockwood Experimental Aquaculture Centre in 1988-89. Moodie, Loadman and Mathias received a $137,000 grant from Manitoba Hydro to help develop this alternative industry for northern communities.

Three Students Receive Prestigious Awards

Three University of Winnipeg students were awarded 1991 Sir William Stephenson Scholarships.

Maurissa Abecassis, Claudia Hudspeth and Marni Wiseman each received $2,400 for their outstanding academic achievement, superior leadership qualities and potential to make a valuable contribution to their country.

All three students are recipients of numerous awards for their academic achievement at The University of Winnipeg. Abecassis, who is enrolled in a BA (Honours) with a major in Psychology, is involved in research at the St. Boniface General Hospital in the Chemical Dependency program. Abecassis is also a teaching assistant and a tutor and does extensive volunteer work for which she has received recognition. She hopes to work in both a clinical and a university setting.

Hudspeth received a National Science and Engineering Research Council of Canada undergraduate award to do research in the field of parasitology and Nuclear Magnetic Resonance. She also tutors at the University and teaches swimming, water safety and fitness at the YM-YWCA. Hudspeth is interested in a career in medicine, particularly in cancer research.

Wiseman is a Canada Scholar and winner of a 1991-1992 Merck-Frosst Award. She is a student ambassador and also serves on the Academic Affairs Committee of The University of Winnipeg's Students' Association. She has a column in the Free Press Weekly. Wiseman also does volunteer work and tutors in Mathematics. She anticipates a career in research in biology or organic chemistry, but has given some thought to the field of medicine as well.

These three scholarships were made possible by a $100,000 gift from Sir William Stephenson in 1984. This was the largest single private gift ever made to the University for scholarship purposes. Sir William Stephenson, through his intelligence work during World War II, was known by the code name INTREPID.

Responsibility for selection of award recipients is shared by The University of Winnipeg and the Sir William Stephenson Scholarship Trustees.

Stephenson Recipient Wins Rhodes Scholarship

University of Winnipeg student Arash Abizadeh was one of only 10 Canadians to receive a Rhodes Scholarship this year.

Success usually follows University of Winnipeg Stephenson Scholarship winners throughout their careers. The most recent evidence of this came last month when a past winner was awarded a prestigious Rhodes Scholarship.

Arash Abizadeh, who won a Stephenson Scholarship in 1990, will be on his way to Oxford University in England this fall on a Rhodes Scholarship. He was one of two Winnipeggers to be selected for the honour. Only three undergraduate students are selected from the Prairies and a total of 10 are chosen from across Canada each year.

"I'm excited by the opportunity to live in a different culture," said Abizadeh, a fourth year Honours student in Economics and Political Science. "It has been a rewarding experience here for me and I'm looking forward to that again."

With numerous academic awards to his credit and a straight-A transcript, Abizadeh believes that it was "on the strength of my University of Winnipeg degree that I got the Rhodes Scholarship."

But he added that just like the Stephenson Scholarship, extracurricular activities also play a significant role in the selection process.

Abizadeh was Executive Coordinator of the 1989 "Earth: Our Country Peace Festival" and was elected as Secretary of the Baha'i Peace Council for two years. He has taken a six-week French immersion course in Quebec and held a four-month summer job with the Government of Quebec.

Abizadeh intends to continue his studies in Political Science at Oxford. He plans to return to North America for a PhD and then pursue an academic career.

Appeal at levels never seen before.

Faculty and staff answered the call in spite of their current support of the Silver Jubilee campaign. Overall faculty and staff giving for the 1991 fiscal year sits at 28 per cent. Voting members of the board of regents were strongly represented at 65 per cent.

"Despite the recession, people have been generous in supporting The University of Winnipeg," Daly said. "We're very encouraged to know that there is still a broad base of support out there, especially from alumni who are the backbone of any campaign."

Daly also said he was pleased that participation remains high even though regular fundraising drives were not held in the past few years. Annual appeals had been put on hold largely due to the focus on the University's Capital Campaign. However, last year the Development Committee of the Board of Regents presented an action plan for fundraising which called for the revival of the Annual Appeal and set the 1991 goal.

Daly said that the University's alumni data base includes active addresses for 13,162 alumni and for the 1991

Annual Appeal, the total participation rate was 6.1 per cent. Now that The University of Winnipeg Annual Appeal has been institutionalized, he said, participation rates can be driven up. "It was a good year... We learned how to use a new information system that was instrumental in increasing our response rates. Everyone on the fourth floor worked hard and put up with a fair amount of disruption of the traditional methods this year. We surpassed an ambitious goal this year but now it's time to put our increased capacity and expertise to work for the 1992 Annual Appeal. We plan to have more good news next year."

The University of Winnipeg Anniversary Trivia

Celebrating 25 YEARS

According to University of Winnipeg students the place to "eat well" in Winnipeg in 1967 was Pizza Place. Pizzas "start at $1.00 and go as high as $3.00, but one would have to be starving to finish the $3.00 meals." Good meals were available at the Happy Vineyard, but were "too high for regular eating by university students." The price - $4.00 to $6.00.

Destination: Guatemala

The University of Winnipeg Alumni Association and John Walker Travel present the "Guatemalan Easter Odyssey" tour, Apr. 5 - 18. Participants will travel to Guatemala to explore the diverse topography of the country - its volcanoes, rain forests, deserts and beaches - and to gain insight into the fascinating culture of the Maya Indians. Architect Douglas J. Cannell and independent tour guide Eduardo Hernandez will lead the group. William Morgan, Professor of Anthropology at The University of Winnipeg, is a consultant in planning the tour. For more information, please call Brian Daly, Director of Advancement and Alumni, at 786-9148.

Three New Members Join Advisory Committees

Since the formation of the two advisory committees on computing and on institutional planning and research, three new members have been added. University Secretary Roger Kingsley will serve on the computing committee and Director of Records Linda Simpson on the planning and research committee. Operations Auditor Carol Halko will act as an additional resource person for both committees.

Exhibition of Expressionist Art Opens in Gallery 1C03

"27 x Sonia," an exhibition of works by German Expressionist Walter Gramatté (1897-1929), will be held in Gallery 1C03, Jan. 16-Feb. 15.

The 27 portraits of the artist's wife, the gifted composer and musician Sonia Gramatté, were done between 1920 and 1927. Watercolours, woodcuts, lithographs, dry-point and etchings are included.

Gramatté was active in Germany in the 1920s and he produced a large body of work in various media. He had a special affinity for portraiture, however, and produced around 200 self-portraits and around 120 studies of his wife.

He had several one-man exhibitions in Berlin during his lifetime, and in 1932 a memorial exhibition of his work travelled through 10 German cities before it was declared "degenerate" by the Nazi regime. His work was not shown again until after World War II.

At the request of Sonia Gramatté, after the death of her husband, the great German Expressionist Erich Heckel created a "colour book." It recorded the colours Walter Gramatté had chosen for his and Sonia's apartment. Part of this colour scheme, which always provided the background for Gramatté's paintings, is reproduced in Gallery 1C03 for this exhibition. The Colour Book is now in the Brücke Museum in Berlin.

After Gramatté's death in 1929, Sonia met and married Dr. Ferdinand Eckhardt. They emigrated to Canada in 1953 when Dr. Eckhardt became Director of the Winnipeg Art Gallery. Sonia continued her work as a composer and musician.

After Sonia Eckhardt-Gramatté's death in 1974, Dr. Eckhardt continued to promote the works of the two artists celebrated in this exhibition. He has taken on this responsibility, he said, because he "inherited" them.

This exhibition is co-sponsored by the Eckhardt-Gramatté Foundation. The University of Winnipeg is grateful to the foundation for the loan of the works.

This exhibition runs from Jan. 16 - Feb. 15: Mon.-Fri., 10 a.m. - 6 p.m., Sat., 1-4 p.m. Closed Sun.

Bank of Montreal Financial Planning Tips

It's Your Future - Why Not Talk About It?

The average person spends approximately 2000 hours a year earning an income. Financial planners estimate that the average amount of time given to planning or the best use of that income is about six hours a year. Even more revealing: It is estimated that partners in a marriage or other stable relationship spend only about three hours a year discussing important financial planning issues. Does that sound familiar?

Bankers and others in financial services see the results, daily, of so little communication. It's hard to convince many people to take a forward-looking shared approach to financial decisions. Money is such an emotional subject. Human nature being what it is, it seems that often only one person in a partnership takes on the job of managing the money and making important decisions that affect future security for both. Often this is because the other partner shows little inclination or interest.

Ask yourself this though - in a crisis if one of you becomes ill or even dies unexpectedly, can the other take over and run the finances so that the family will be protected? For instance, have you considered giving each other power of attorney so that either of you can legally act or obtain important information when needed? Are you both aware of important and far-reaching decisions regarding your financial future as they are being undertaken?

Where a family's security is concerned both husband and wife should share decisions affecting mortgages, life, property or other insurance, investments held, wills, house deeds, other important legal documents, bank accounts or safety deposit boxes. This is a very important consideration particularly in light of a recent situation as I saw it develop.

When it's too late...

It came to my attention when a long-standing customer was suddenly widowed. While most financial matters had been properly looked after, she discovered that on renewing the mortgage on their home two years earlier, her husband had not renewed the life insurance coverage attached to it. Since she lacked sufficient income to take over the mortgage herself, she had to pay it off from the proceeds of the estate. While she is sure that this was an oversight on her husband's part, no one will ever know. But, it probably could have been avoided had they reviewed what sort of income she would have should he die and what she would want to do about their home.

Then, there was the situation where a wife had kept the fact that she had considerable savings from everyone in her family, even her husband. Her savings were in the form of Canada Savings Bonds, the income from which she kept undeclared in her safety deposit box. When she died of a sudden stroke, a search began for her will. The safety deposit box key was found among her papers. The box was finally located a year later and after great expense. The shock of the family can only be imagined when over $100,000 in bonds was found but no will.

Day of reckoning

Nobody relishes particularly the task of putting the family finances in order. But, doing it as a team is the best insurance I know of that things will be done the way you think it is best with your special understanding of total family needs. One suggestion I often make is that couples have a yearly meeting with their banker or other financial advisor or both to update everyone on new developments. These may involve anticipated financial considerations such as university tuition needs, investment needs, an expected new home purchase or the possibility of retiring early.

This kind of meeting means your professionals are always in a position to step in in the event of a crisis. It also puts the discussion on a business footing and brings out many considerations that can be put to constructive use at a later private discussion between the partners in a relationship.

The important thing in any close relationship is to keep the lines of communication open, share ideas and benefit from each other's experience. It's your future. Why not talk about it?

Suppressing the Spirit: 500 Years

The theme for this year's Religion and Life Week, Jan. 27 - 31, will be "Suppressing the Spirit: 500 Years."

The main speaker will be Rev. Stan McKay, Director of the Dr. Jessie Saulteaux Resource Centre in Beausejour, Manitoba. There will also be a lecture by Jane Ash Poitras (Edmonton) on "Spiritual Insight into the Cosmos" and a lecture by Jules Lavallee, Director of Anishinabe Respect, on "The Teaching of the Medicine Wheel."

All lectures will be held from 12:30 to 1:30 p.m. in Room 3C01 at The University of Winnipeg. All events are free and the public is invited to attend.

Visiting Professorship Announced

Doris Young has been appointed Visiting Professor in Native Studies in The University of Winnipeg's Canadian Studies program. Her three-year appointment was made possible by a grant from the Canadian Studies Directorate of the Department of the Secretary of State.

Young is enthusiastic that the University's Canadian Studies program has been able to offer a faculty position to an individual from the aboriginal community. "The University belongs to aboriginal people as much as any other group," she points out, "yet they don't have the same feeling of ownership and participation. A program like this can make a difference."

She would like to see some special lectures given off-campus at places like the Rising Sun High School and the Freight House, a native community centre. She believes that this would help native people feel more comfortable in a university setting.

"The visiting professorship is a good opportunity for the University and the community to work together. There are many exciting things happening in the aboriginal community, issues of the constitution, self-government and aboriginal justice for example, that are also important issues for the rest of society," says Young.

Young has a strong background in education. She has done research on control of local education for the Manitoba Indian Chiefs. She was instructor/coordinator for a community-based senior management certificate program for Manitoba Indian bands at Continuing Education at the University of Manitoba. She has taught native studies courses for several years at the University of Manitoba, and has also taught off-campus courses at the University of Regina. She currently teaches History of the Canadian Indians at The University of Winnipeg.

Analyzing the Aboriginal Justice Inquiry Report

This winter the Continuing Education Division is offering a new course, "Analyzing the Aboriginal Justice Inquiry Report," with facilitator Doris Young, the University's new Visiting Professor in Native Studies.

The Aboriginal Justice Inquiry Report was released last year. It came amid the national controversy over the degree of autonomy that First Nations should receive in the Constitution. It came amid the controversy over relations of the peoples of the First Nations to the provincial police and justice systems. This climate of flux and change and divided opinions provided the catalyst idea for this course. It is an attempt to provide reasoned dialogue and a genuine cross-fertilization of ideas between persons on such emotional issues.

Doris Young, the instructor and developer for the course, was the senior researcher for the inquiry. She has years of experience, both provincially and nationally, working with aboriginal special interest groups and as liaison for "dominant society" institutions and groups providing services to aboriginal people. These include health and child welfare, constitutional matters, women's issues, senior's issues, and post-secondary education. Her volunteer work includes a Health Sciences Centre Board re-appointment. These kinds of tasks leave her with the theoretical and experiential knowledge necessary to offer an objective representation of the report.

A preliminary survey of practising professionals in the police department, corrections system, probation, family services, and a native band has already contributed excellent information modifications to the content of the course.

The course will discuss the overall purpose of the inquiry. It will examine some of the research background material utilized, including the conferences with the United States Indian Justice people and the Elders Conference. The foregoing will aid in legitimizing the information in the report. The report comes to two main conclusions: the need for native self-government and a separate aboriginal justice system. If possible these conclusions will be discussed in the context of the working/professional background of the participants. The course will be structured in a seminar format as much as possible, using special interest group segments of the class in rotation, as study group catalysts.

The course will be held Tuesdays, Jan. 21 to March 24, 7 - 9 p.m., Room 2M70. Enrolment is limited to 50.

Reminders

Committees Need Your Input

All members of the University community are invited to make submissions to the Advisory Committee on Computing and to the Advisory Committee on Institutional Planning and Research. Submissions in writing or in person should be made to George Tomlinson, President's Office (ext. 9194; Vax E-mail TOMLINSN). Deadline: Jan. 15.

Wanted: Innovative Ideas

The deadline for submitting your proposal for the Innovative Projects Fund is fast approaching. As part of the University's 25th anniversary celebrations, a $5,000 fund has been established to support ideas that faculty, staff, students and alumni have to improve the University. A committee will judge all proposals and allocate funding. Small prizes will be awarded to the three best ideas. Submissions should be forwarded to Bonnie Archibald, Executive Assistant to the President, President's Office. Deadline: Jan. 15.
