

1986 Enrichment Mini-Course Program

For the third consecutive year, the University of Winnipeg will offer an exciting learning experience for gifted secondary students in grades nine through twelve. The Enrichment Mini-Course Program, to be held May 5-9, will enable selected students from school divisions in Manitoba to attend the University of Winnipeg and study one course in-depth for twenty-five hours.

The University's commitment to the program stems from a belief in the importance of community involvement and a recognition of certain elements important to gifted students — freedom of course selections, flexibility in grade placement, an in-depth pursuit of learning, an opportunity to interact with other gifted students, and exposure to a university setting.

The planning and implementation of this program is co-ordinated by a Program Steering Committee comprised of representatives from the Provincial School System and the University of Winnipeg Continuing Education Division. The 1986 Committee is chaired by Cathrine Froese-Klassen of the St. James Assiniboia School Division No. 2.

Participating students are selected at the school level. Continuing Education provides support services for the program, while Hinton Bradbury, Psychology, co-ordinates faculty participation. Thirty-four courses representing virtually every discipline will be offered.

At the end of the week, both students and faculty will evaluate their experiences. "In past years, evaluations have been very positive", said Julie Crawford of the Continuing Education Division. "The students really enjoy being treated like adults". In his evaluation of last year's program, one professor wrote: "There was more interest from these students in one week than from any of my freshman classes in recent years".

New Fellowship for Research on Women and Social Change in Canada

A new Postdoctoral Fellowship for Research on Women and Social Change in Canada, the Therese F.-Casgrain Postdoctoral Fellowship is being administered by the Social Science and Humanities Research Council. The purpose of this fellowship is to encourage research on any subject which falls within the broadly defined area of women and social change in Canada. The Therese F.-Casgrain Foundation, which has established the fellowship, is particularly interested in supporting action-oriented research, either basic or applied, which will include a discussion of public policy options and propose recommendations for change.

Types of subject areas which would be suitable for support under this program are:

- economic relationships between the paid and unpaid work force
- the changing shape of work
- affirmative action: its impact on women and on productivity in Canadian corporations
- contemporary values, societal attitudes and belief systems in Canadian corporations
- the effect of changes in family structure on women's role in society
- the impact of social security, unemployment insurance and taxation policies on women.

Value of Award: $25,000, tenable for 12 months

The first award will be made in 1987.

Lori Dunbar, Assistant Director of Security Services, began her career in security five years ago when she was hired as a security guard/steno clerk by Metropol, Ltd. "I was eighteen years old and looking for a job", she said. "I had always thought of security in the 'night-watchman' sense, but the idea of working during the day, and in a university setting, seemed interesting."

After five years with Metropol, Lori was offered an opportunity to work directly for the University as Assistant Director of Security Services. "I felt that I had the qualifications that would lend themselves to this type of job", she said. "I still like to join in and help the staff as much as I can."

Lori said that in a large institution with a wide cross-section of people, it can be difficult to distinguish who belongs from who doesn't. "It's hard to tell who's here to study and who's here to steal", she said. "The successful thieves are the ones who blend in".

An exercise buff, Lori has studied Tai-Kwon-Do for three years. She said that in her position as a security guard, knowledge of self-defense is not emphasized. "We would rather have people who can talk their way out of a situation than fight their way out. We're not here to be heroes."

Lori works well with the security staff at The University of Winnipeg. "It's a really good group", she said.

Why Waste It?

Canadians are throwing away a valuable natural resource. Every working day, crumpled notes and memos, letters, copies, reports, drafts, file material and computer printouts are discarded and taken, along with other wastes, to incinerators, sanitary landfill sites and dumps.

The University of Winnipeg Office Paper Recycling Project will be implemented during the summer months. This demonstration project, co-sponsored by The University of Winnipeg and the Recycling Council of Manitoba, will address the problem of waste paper on our campus. It is estimated that the University currently spends $15. for each ton of paper hauled away as garbage. But depending on market demands and the grades of paper collected, the University can earn from $25. to $50. per ton of paper collected for recycling purposes. The paper will be picked up, paid for, reduced once more to pulp, and re-processed into new paper products.

To ensure a broad representation of the University community in the consultation process necessary to the successful implementation of this project, a Steering Committee will be organized. The administration's liaison contact is Steve Coppinger, Assistant to the President. Project Co-ordinators are Professor Fenton, Economics; and Professor Peter Miller, Philosophy. Kristen Templin has been hired by the Recycling Council of Manitoba for a six-month period as a research assistant and to lay the groundwork for the system.

"The project's aims may be far-reaching", said Templin, but its approach must be step-by-step". Templin said that the first steps have been taken in the collection of waste computer print-out paper. "This paper has a current sales value of $40. per ton, sometimes higher. We're requesting the assistance of everyone who disposes of such paper in their normal course of duties."

Printouts, collected separately from other types of paper, should be placed in a box and will be picked up by the project. Scrap paper (non-confidential, blank on one side) will be collected and donated to the library and day-care centres.

For further information on the project, contact Kristen Templin at ext. 307.

Students Helping Students

A Mature Student Peer Counseling Program, organized by Dr. Ed Allen and Roxanne Blowers of the Psychology department, in co-operation with the Mature Students' Association and Counselling Services, will be established on campus to address the need for more effective approaches in helping our increasing mature student population.

The peer counselling concept is based on the notion that students generally seek out other students when they are experiencing frustration, financial or personal concerns, or other problems.

"We're really pleased about the program", said Connie Hemmett, president of the Mature Students' Association. "Many mature students have difficulty adjusting to a university setting. Often mature students are single mothers or people or have been in the work force and have returned to university to upgrade their education. It's a diverse group, but there are problems that mature students have in common."

Hemmett said that approximately twenty students, most of them "mature", will be trained as peer counsellors. Components of their training program will include practicing communication skills, examining critical issues, participating in individual and group activities, and in-service training.

The program is expected to commence in September, 1986.

CIAO!

The annual C.I.A.O. program (cours intensif d'anglais — ouest!) for students learning English as a second language will run from May 20 to June 30. Erin Stewart, who will direct the program for the third time says that she is expecting 40-50 Quebecois students to participate. Norma Armstrong, assistant director, is on the lookout for suitable host families who may wish to billet students during this six-week course. Those interested, please contact Norma at extension 749.
